The boat swayed beneath me. The surroundings were awesome.

"Put this on, Ben," said Mum, catching me off-guard with a diving suit. She held it open for me to step into like I was five, and stuffed my arms into the sleeves. "It's going to be chilly," she explained.

Ever since my gymnastics accident last year, Mum had been particular about my physical health. My focus drifted back to the water. The waves slapped against the boat as we headed out to sea.

The captain was talking into the microphone while steering the boat from the front of the cabin. "There's a strong wind so we'll have a rough ride, but nothing our fine vessel can't handle," he said cheerfully. "If we're lucky, we'll see sea lions and dolphins."

Nazri and Meng were squatting by the side of a stream, looking at guppies.

(39)

It was fasinating to watch the fish swimming. Sometimes, the translucent tails catches the sunlight.

(40)

(41)

"The tails are swirling around like ribbons," said Meng enthusitically.

(42)

"Doesn't it look like someone has drip drops of paint in the stream?" Nazri asked. "Come on! Let's catch some fish!" he added.

The duo waded into the knee-deep stream, armed with fishing nets and a pail. Very quietly and slow, they made their way to a small inlet where many guppies were swimming. Just as they lowed their nets, the guppies swim away in a flash!

(43)

(44)

(46)

Nazri and Meng could not belef their eyes. One second the guppies were there and the next second, they were going. Suddenly, there was a movement in the green weeds. Nazri caught a glimse of an orange and a red ribbon weaving through them. The children tried their best to walk in the stream without cause ripples. SWISH! The guppies had dissapearred once more. The boys looked on desolately.

(47)

(48)

(49)

(50)

Mrs Clark entered the classroom, switched off the lights and lowered the projector screen at the front of the room. "Hooray! Movie time in coding club," Bradley said.

"Good afternoon, everyone!" said Mrs Clark. "Today we'll be watching a short video on creative coding." At the confused looks we gave her, she added, "It is about using code to express our artistic sides." The next fifteen minutes was full of amazing images, still and animated. They were all created on a computer and then displayed on billboards and screens, along with clothing designs, video games, and lights that reacted to music. Halfway through the video, some students in the back lost interest and started talking about a new movie. Lucy twisted in her seat and shushed them, earning her some murderous stares and a "Nerd!"

"You're in here too, you know," I shot back at them. Lucy gave me a grateful smile and mouthed a thank-you.

At the end of the video, Mrs Clark switched the lights back on and said, "Ready? Here's your exercise." We all exchanged puzzled glances, but took out our notebooks. "I would like you to list as many ways as possible to incorporate coding, both functional and creative, into the upcoming school dance." Mrs Clark pointed to the clock on the wall. "You have three minutes. Go." My friends and I huddled together. Erin volunteered to jot our ideas down.

"Okay. Um... we could use code to take song requests," I said.

"And to programme a robot to greet people," said Erin.

Lucy pointed at the screen we had been watching. "We can programme the lights to flicker to the rhythms."

"But that's old. We need new ideas," I said.

Mrs Clark, who happened to be walking among the groups, halted at ours. "Let's remember that when we're brainstorming, every idea is valid." I blushed a little but nodded.

Erin added Lucy's idea to the list. "Shh. We don't want other groups to hear," Lucy whispered. We lowered our voices, but when I looked around, the other groups seemed to have finished and were just waiting for time to run out.

"You should be done by now," said Mrs Clark. Erin lowered her pencil, and we all leant forward in our seats to see that we had eleven ideas on our list. Mrs Clark collected the idea sheets. I was pleased to see that the other teams had much shorter lists.

"Very impressive," said Mrs Clark after she had read each list aloud. "I'm glad some of you were paying attention to the video." She gave a pointed look at the students Lucy had shushed. "But we have a clear winner for sheer volume of ideas." She gestured to my friends and me, and we cheered.

"Really? That's not fair!" Bradley whined. "We were trying to come up with the best ideas, not a whole list of dull ones."

"Hey, all ideas are valid," I informed him. Out of the corner of my eye, I saw Mrs Clark smile.
