Some Facts

The Aedes mosquito prefers to breed in clean stagnant water readily found in our homes. All it takes is clean, stagnant water as little as the size of a 20-cent coin, for mosquitoes to breed.

The number of dengue cases in Singapore has been on the rise, with this year's numbers already at an all-time high. In Singapore this year, the cumulative number of dengue cases stands at over 22,400 and there are close to 400 dengue clusters around our island (as of 4 August 2020). You can get notifications on areas with higher Aedes aegypti mosquito population with the National Environment Agency's (NEA's) myENV app.

Enforcement and Penalties

Since 15 July 2020, heavier penalties have been imposed on households, construction sites and town councils with:

- Repeated mosquito breeding offences;
- Multiple mosquito breeding habitats detected in a single inspection;
- Mosquito breeding detected after having received a legal notice from NEA.

Protection

To protect you and your loved ones from dengue fever, do the following at least once a week:

1. Loosen hardened soil.
2. Turn over pails.
3. Tip vases that are not in use.
4. Flip flowerpot plates that are not in use.
5. Clear the roof gutter and use insecticide.

If you are living in a dengue cluster, include the following practices:

1. Spray insecticides in dark corners around the house
2. Apply insect repellent regularly
3. Wear long sleeve tops and long pants

If you have dengue fever, you can apply repellent regularly so that mosquitoes do not bite you, pick up the virus and then transmit them to others.

Section I: Comprehension (Open-ended) (20 marks)

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. Your answer must be based on the passage read.

Grandma has always stayed with us since Grandpa passed away when I was just a baby. Grandma used to take care of me because Father and Mother had to work. She would cook lunch for me. Whenever she cooked, I could not resist having an extra helping. When I was little, Grandma took me to the nearby playground every evening. Sometimes, when I did not have a friend to play with, she would sit on the other end of the see-saw, her wrinkled feet bracing herself, as we bounced up and down. When I entered Primary One, we would walk to school talking about what we planned to do that day. Every morning at the school gate, Grandma would give me a big hug. In the afternoon, she would be at the gate waiting for me.	5
Things changed after a fall. While coming out of the toilet, Grandma slipped and fell onto the floor. Although Grandma recovered, she walked with a slight limp and also started to forget things.	10
"Where are my glasses?" asked Grandma one day. "I just put them on the table." She flipped aside her newspapers and then stood up looking around anxiously. At that very instant, my eyebrows rose.	15
"Grandma, your glasses are around your neck," I said.
Grandma peered down and gave a feeble smile. Heaving a sigh, she sat down and continued reading the newspapers.
Two weeks later, something scary happened. The school dismissal bell rang and I ran to the school gate looking around for the calm face and pleasant smile that welcomed me every day after school. Grandma was not there. The minutes ticked by as I waited, pacing up and down. Finally, with a heavy heart, I took the route we walked every day hoping to meet Grandma along the way. When I reached home, I noticed that Grandma's slippers were not in the shoe rack and sprinted to the lift again.	20
"Grandma! Grandma! Where are you?" my shouts echoed in the void deck.	25
As I wandered from one block of flats to another, my view turned hazy with tears.
Suddenly, from a distance, I saw Grandma sitting alone in the playground. It was odd but true. Grandma was lost. She was lost in the neighbourhood where she had stayed for more than twenty years. Somehow, she could not remember the path that we took to school though we had been taking the same route for more than three years. Neither could she recall the path home. She sat at the playground hoping to meet me.	30
The following week, Father and Mother took Grandma to the hospital. When they returned, Grandma's face had a blank look while Father and Mother appeared grim. That night, Father and Mother explained Grandma's condition to me.
"Grandma has started forgetting things as she is ill with Alzheimer's disease," muttered Father.	35
Mother added, "For now, there is no cure but with the doctor's help and medicine, it will not worsen too quickly."
The words hit me hard like a sledgehammer.
"Grandma will be fine. We will give her the support she needs," said Mother as she went over to Grandma and softly placed her hand on her shoulder. Grandma continued rocking with no expression on her face.	40
Grandma stopped accompanying me to school or the playground. Grandma preferred to sit on the rocking chair at home, gaze at the television and doze off. I could not believe she was the same person who had once been so active. Thinking of all that Grandma had done for me, I told myself it was now my turn to care for her. I resolved to spend more time with her as it seemed that our roles have been reversed.	45
