Kiri was on a trip to Cambodia with his granddaughter, Sophea. After months of planning, their dream was finally realised as they travelled to Kampong Thom, where he grew up. Entranced by the beautiful fields and the distant clamour of roosters crowing, Sophea walked to the river where her grandfather had once spent hours fishing.

The duo trekked laboriously up the hill, perspiration dotting their brows. They could see the vast countryside stretching before them from the summit. The extract below is taken from a school talk.

A strong community makes us feel safe and connected, and it all begins at home. The family serves as the foundation of a healthy support system and spending quality time together lays the groundwork for overcoming life's challenges.

Family time offers invaluable benefits: it strengthens emotional bonds, boosts confidence, and reinforces our sense of self-worth. For children, it cultivates a robust sense of identity, helping them grow into confident and secure adults.

There are countless ways to enjoy quality family time. Indoors, a lively game night can fill the house with laughter and joy. Outdoors, a simple picnic in the park can create cherished memories while allowing us to admire nature.

As the saying goes, "Home is where the heart is." When family bonds are strong, they form the heart of a thriving community. Together, we support and uplift one another. In this way, we grow stronger.

For each question from 21 to 25, choose the best answer. Shade your answer (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet. (5 marks)

- (1) curious and relaxed
 - (2) bored and distracted
 - (3) confused and hesitant
 - (4) determined and fearless
- 24 "Ready for a magical night under the stars with your loved ones?" Why did the writer ask the question in Text 1?

Please note that the passage for Comprehension questions 66 to 75 in Booklet B is on the next page. You may now go on to Booklet B.

Refer to the passage below when you answer questions 66 to 75 in Booklet B.

Creak... The closet door groaned in protest as I tugged it open, its hinges squealing like they, too, wanted no part in what lay inside. Hanging limply before me was a rabbit costume – not the soft, storybook kind, but a garish ensemble of neon pink fur with ears that drooped like they had given up hope. Its oversized head sagged to one side. My heart sank. This was it. My debut performance. My graduation day. A room with an expectant audience... and that was what I had to wear? Taking in the scene, I noticed the others – fluffy sheep, dignified goats, even cows that looked halfway decent. Somehow, everyone's outfit looked far more presentable than mine. There and then, I had the urge to slip away.

"Where are you going, Gary?" Leon's voice stopped me. He was fiddling with the long frayed tail of his goat costume, looking as ridiculous as I felt, yet standing tall all the same. He gave a look – the kind that only best friends would, halfway between challenge and comfort. "It's okay to be nervous," he said, his voice filled with quiet determination. "We all start somewhere. You've put in blood, sweat and tears for this. You're not backing out now, are you? We're all in this together." His words hit me. The long rehearsals, the endless retakes, the body aches. Had I forgotten all those? I took a deep breath. Not for the costumes but the effort. Not for the pink rabbit but for the people who believed in me. I was not going to run away. Not this time.

Two days later at the full-dress rehearsal, my confidence cracked. The auditorium was buzzing with quiet chatter. My silly costume made every movement a chore; each hop felt unnatural, blown out of proportion. I shuffled out, my heart pounding like a drum. The spotlight lit the stage as if it were preparing to expose my secret. I began my scene. Then came the giggles. Small at first, then spreading like wildfire. My shoulders slumped when I stumbled over a line. Laughter. More laughter. The gnawing doubt clawed at me – was that failure? What a disaster! If there were a trapdoor, I would gladly vanished. Exiting the stage after my part, my oversized foot caught on a mess of wires. Like a puppet with its strings cut, I tripped and landed on my knees. Laughter exploded. Lying there, humiliation scorched my face. All of a sudden, something changed. I remembered Leon's words. "We all start somewhere." I knew I had to face my fears. Slowly, the nerves faded away.

Then came the opening night. The curtain rose to thunderous applause. My stomach churned with butterflies, but this time, I welcomed them. As I hopped into the spotlight, the audience erupted into laughter – not mockery, but delight. Every exaggerated movement, every silly twitch of my ears added to the joy. I was not being laughed at. Instead, my antics were making the guests laugh. Backstage, Leon flashed me a thumbs-up. The fears were irrational. I had made peace with them.

"See? You did it! You're a natural," he said when the final applause rang out. I smiled, the joy of the moment finally sinking in.

"Thanks for talking me out of leaving. It isn't so bad after all," I replied, tugging at the floppy ears. "This outfit still looks ridiculous." Leon grinned. In that pink fluff, I had learnt about courage and that the stage was not about perfection. It was about showing up, even when I was scared. My debut performance was a success.
